Panel Discussion, *The Ritual of Altars

Religion is getting a bit weird these days. As we face a world imperiled by fundamentalisms, it has been transformed into a war-making tool that has become incompatible with life itself. Deepak Chopra commented recently in Time magazine: "Religion has become divisive, quarrelsome, and idiotic." And that is putting it mildly. So how do we even begin to talk about art in the same breath with religion, or try to suggest that they can somehow come together again?

Sacred Wild will examine the way contemporary artists are drawn to sacred images and are using them in their everyday life. The artists incorporate or address the trend towards investigating one's personal spirituality over organized religious thought.

Suzi Gablik is an art critic, artist and teacher. She is the author of The Re-enchantment of Art and Conversations Beyond the End of Time.
