Long before Donald Judd arrived in Marfa, long before the town was named Marfa, people from diverse backgrounds—Apache, Comanche, Spaniards, Mexicans, Tejanos, and Anglo-American pioneering cowboys—built communities on the surrounding arid landscape and laid the foundation for Marfa’s unique cultural enchantments. Since Judd created the Chinati Foundation in 1979 in honor of the Minimalist tradition, Marfa has become a formidable Contemporary Art scene in step with its larger, better known counterparts on the East and West Coasts. Today, Marfa is a unique amalgam of its ever-accumulating cultural ancestors and the international art world. How does one begin to reconcile these seemingly disparate and diametrically opposed community elements that are simultaneously autonomous from and interdependent on each other? What happens when contact turns to conflict? Or when divergence transforms into convergence?

Heterotopia responds to these concerns by uncovering the hidden creative history of Marfa and its environs, pre-Judd, while also bringing to the fore contemporary cultural production happening on the periphery of Marfa’s mainstream art scene. This multi-venue exhibition features a diverse range of works by Texas artists, craftsmen, and cultural workers who represent or speak to the indigenous, Chicano, and cowboy cultures of the Far West Texas region. Heterotopia features the work of Texas-based participants as well as special guest artists whose works specifically speak to the broader issues of diaspora, transculturality, and hybridity that circulate through and around Marfa.
