Prisoners may make therapeutic art monuments addressing the death penalty.

Matthew Crouser | BWW and the Huffington Post

In an article published in The Huffington Post, Matthew Crouser explores the relationship between art and the death penalty, discussing how prisoners use art to express their emotions and thoughts about their situation. The article highlights the therapeutic benefits of art for prisoners and the role of artists in creating a more humane death penalty system.